Need & Impact

Homelessness In New York City

An Ongoing Crisis & Desperate Need For Private Sector Assistance

Overview of the Issue

New York City fosters over 350,000 homeless individuals, with more than half of these people living in city-funded and operated shelters.

The recent increase in Homelessness has left more than 100,000 children in shelters or on the streets. This equates to nearly 1-in-10 school aged children!

Housing prices have increased, leaving many unable to pay rent. Therefore, future needs will require more shelters and greater efficiency.

Current Challenges:

Homeless Shelters:
<70% of the current NYC homeless population relies on very short-term shelters, which are helpful, but ultimately are only a temporary solution.

Shelter Availability:
New York City's goal for shelter availability is 85%, but they have nowhere near the amount of funding or resources to complete this task.

Affordable Housing:
To fix the housing crisis, New York needs to build 350,000 affordable housing units. So far, they have only built 30,000 of the 350,000 needed.

Impact on Community:

Keeping Children Off The Streets

The homeless crisis has greatly impacted many vulnerable populations around New York City, especially children and families. This becomes an inhibitor to building generational wealth.

Health Risks

With an increased homeless population, disease spreads quickly due to a widespread lack of hygiene. Substance abuse can also lead to many homeless people dying of overdoses.

Lost Productivity

Homelessness causes governments to spend money building shelters. It can also affect job productivity because without stable housing, individuals struggle to find or maintain employment.
